I

I dissent from the judgments of the Court for the reasons stated in many of my prior opinions. See, e. g., Smith v. California, 361 U. S. 147, 155 (1959) (BLACK, J., concurring); Ginzburg v. United States, 383 U. S. 463, 476 (1966) (BLACK, J., dissenting). In my view the First Amendment denies Congress the power to act as censor and determine what books our citizens may read and what pictures they may watch.

I am particularly sorry to see the Court revive the doctrine of Roth v. United States, 354 U. S. 476 (1957), that "obscenity" is speech for some reason unprotected by the First Amendment. As the Court's many decisions in this area demonstrate, it is extremely difficult for judges or any other citizens to agree on what is "obscene." Since the distinctions between protected speech and obscenity are so elusive and obscure almost every "obscenity" case involves difficult constitutional issues. I agree, for the reasons set forth in Part I of MR. JUSTICE WHITE's opinion, that this statute may and should be construed as requiring administrative and judicial action within specified time limits that will avoid the constitutional issue that would otherwise be presented by Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U. S. 51 (1965). Our decision today in United States v. Reidel, ante, forecloses Luros' claim that the Government may not prohibit the importation of obscene materials for commercial distribution.

Luros also attacked the statute on its face as overbroad because of its apparent prohibition of importation for private use. A statutory scheme purporting to proscribe only importation for commercial purposes would certainly be sufficiently clear to withstand a facial attack on the statute based on the notion that the line between commercial and private importation is so unclear as to inhibit the alleged right to import for private use. Cf. Breard v. Alexandria, 341 U. S. 622 (1951). It is incontestable that 18 U. S. C. § 1461 (1964) is intended to cover at the very least importation of obscene materials for commercial purposes. RE: No. 133 - United States v. Thirty-seven Photographs

Dear Byron:

I am quite satisfied with your revision of Thirty-seven Photographs except at one place. At page 11, would you consider substituting the following for the sentences starting in the middle of the page, "Of Course, these time limits, etc." and ending three lines from the bottom, "We decide none of these questions today":

"Of course, our conclusion is not necessarily determinative of the time limits which will pass constitutional muster in other contexts. For example, decision as to what the Constitution requires of time limits between a state censor's claim that a film is obscene and his institution of judicial proceedings, or between the commencement and completion of such proceedings, involves considerations different from those presented in the context of a claim of obscenity made by customs officials at the border. We decide none of those questions today."

I'd have difficulty with any film censorship scheme which allowed time limits longer than those here approved.

Sincerely,

WB

MR. JUSTICE STEWART, concurring in the judgment.

I agree with the Court that the First Amendment does not prevent the border seizure of obscene materials sought to be imported for commercial dissemination. I also agree that Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U. S. 1, requires that there be time limits for the initiation of forfeiture proceedings and for the completion of the judicial determination of obscenity.

But I would not in this case decide, even by way of dicta, that the Government may lawfully seize literary material intended for the purely private use of the importer.<sup>1</sup> The terms of the statute appear to apply to an American tourist who, after exercising his constitutionally protected liberty to travel abroad,<sup>2</sup> returns home with a single book in his luggage, with no intention of selling it or otherwise using it, except to read it. If the Government can constitutionally take the book away from him as he passes through customs, then I do not understand the meaning of Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U. S. 557.

<sup>1</sup> As the opinion of the Court correctly says, even if seizure of material for private use is unconstitutional, the statute can still stand in appropriately narrowed form, and the seizure in this case clearly falls within the valid sweep of such a narrowed statute. Ante, at —, n. 2.

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, dissenting in No. 133 and concurring in No. 534.

Only two years ago in Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U. S. 557 (1969), the Court fully canvassed the range of state interests which might possibly justify regulation of obscenity. That decision refused to legitimize the argument that obscene materials could be outlawed because the materials might somehow encourage antisocial conduct, and unequivocally rejected the outlandish notion that the State may police the thoughts of its citizenry. The Court did, however, approve the validity of regulatory action taken to protect children and unwilling adults from exposure to materials deemed to be obscene. The need for such protection of course arises when obscenity is distributed or displayed publicly; and the Court reaffirmed the principles of Roth v. United States, 354 U. S. 486 (1957), Redrup v. New York, 386 U. S. 767 (1967), and other decisions which involved the commercial distribution of obscene materials. Thus, Stanley turned on an assessment of which state interests may legitimately underpin governmental action, and it is

[April —, 1971]

MR. JUSTICE MARSHALL, dissenting in No. 133 and concurring in No. 534.

Only two years ago in Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U. S. 557 (1969), the Court fully canvassed the range of state interests which might possibly justify regulation of obscenity. That decision refused to legitimize the argument that obscene materials could be outlawed because the materials might somehow encourage antisocial conduct, and unequivocally rejected the outlandish notion that the State may police the thoughts of its citizenry. The Court did, however, approve the validity of regulatory action taken to protect children and unwilling adults from exposure to materials deemed to be obscene. The need for such protection of course arises when obscenity is distributed or displayed publicly; and the Court reaffirmed the principles of Roth v. United States, 354 U. S. 486 (1957), Redrup v. New York, 386 U. S. 767 (1967), and other decisions which involved the commercial distribution of obscene materials. Thus, Stanley turned on an assessment of which state interests may legitimately underpin governmental action, and it is

Re: No. 133 - United States v. Thirty-Seven Photographs

Dear Byron:

Please join me in the opinion you have prepared for this case.

My one concern is as to delays caused by the adjudicating court itself. At times counsel can be pretty helpless when a court, for one reason or another, just does not get around to deciding a case. The opinion requires resolution within 60 days. Perhaps a court's dilatoriness in the face of every reasonable effort by counsel presents another case for another time.

Sincerely,

H.A.B.
