Dear Harry:

I wonder if you really want to join Part I of Hugo's dissenting opinion? This opinion "fudges" considerably but I think it must be read as embedding the 5th Amendment Exclusionary Rule via 4th Amendment.

By the "grapevine" I get it that Hugo views his opinion thus as to Part I.

As of now I will join your dissent as to parts II and III. You may simply show in some form: "I am authorized to state that Mr. Chief Justice Burger joins in Parts II and III of this dissent."

I have an impression that Justice White is revising his dissent and I may be able to join in some part of his opinion.

[June —, 1971]

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER, dissenting in part and concurring in part.

I join the dissenting opinion of MR. JUSTICE WHITE and in Parts II and III of MR. JUSTICE BLACK's dissenting opinion. I also agree with most of what is said in Part I of MR. JUSTICE BLACK's opinion, but I am not prepared to accept the proposition that the Fifth Amendment requires the exclusion of evidence seized in violation of the Fourth Amendment. I join in Part III of MR. JUSTICE STEWART's opinion.

This case illustrates graphically the monstrous price we pay for the Exclusionary Rule in which we seem to have imprisoned ourselves. See my dissent in Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of the Federal Narcotics Bureau.

On the merits of the case I find not the slightest basis in the record to reverse this conviction. Here again the Court reaches out, strains and distorts rules which were showing some signs of stabilizing, and directs a new trial which will be held more than seven years after the criminal acts charged.

Mr. Justice Stone, of the Minnesota Supreme Court, called the kind of judicial functioning in which the Court indulges today "bifurcating elements too infinitesimal to be split."

Dear Byron:

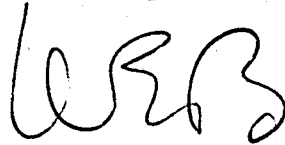

I agree with much of what you say in your June 17 memo on Coolidge and Bivens.

I have this suggestion however: that to accommodate varying views we pose the reargument questions along the following lines:

- (1)-Should Mapp v. Ohio be overruled.
- (2)-If Mapp v. Ohio is not overruled should the scope of the Exclusionary Rule be narrowed so as to relate its application to the nature of the violation.

I am not in any sense "wedded" to this formulation of question.

After a jury trial in a New Hampshire state court, petitioner was convicted of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment. Holding that certain evidence introduced by the State was seized during an "unreasonable" search and that the evidence was inadmissible under the judicially created exclusionary rule of the Fourth Amendment, the majority reverses that conviction. I believe that the search and seizure here was reasonable and that the Fourth Amendment properly construed contains no such exclusionary rule. I dissent.

The relevant facts are these. Pamela Mason, a 14-year-old school girl, lived with her mother and younger brother in Manchester, New Hampshire. She occasionally worked after school as a baby sitter and sought such work by posting a notice on a bulletin board in a local laundromat. On January 13, 1964, she arrived home from school about 4:15 p. m. Pamela's mother told her that a man had called seeking a baby sitter for that evening and said that he would call again later. About 4:30 p. m., after Pamela's mother had left for her job as a waitress at nearby restaurant, Pamela received a phone call which her younger brother answered but did not overhear. From the several opinions that have been filed in this case it is apparent that the law of search and seizure is due for an overhauling. State and federal law enforcement officers and prosecutorial authorities must find quite intolerable the present state of uncertainty, which extends even to such an everyday question as the circumstances under which police may enter a man's property to arrest him and seize a vehicle believed to have been used during the commission of a crime.

I would begin this process of re-evaluation by overruling Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U. S. 643 (1961), and Ker v. California, 374 U. S. 23 (1963). The former of these cases made the federal "exclusionary rule" applicable to the States. The latter forced the States to follow all the ins and out of this Court's Fourth Amendment decisions, handed down in federal cases.

In combination Mapp and Ker have been primarily responsible for bringing about serious distortions and incongruities in this field of constitutional law. Basically these have had two aspects, as I believe an examination of our more recent opinions and certiorari docket will show. First, the States have been put in a federal mold with respect to this aspect of criminal law enforcement, thus depriving the country of the opportunity to observe the effects of different procedures in similar settings. We are called upon in this case to decide issues under the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments arising in the context of a state criminal trial for the commission of a particularly brutal murder. As in every case, our single duty is to determine the issues presented in accord with the Constitution and the law.

Pamela Mason, a 14-year-old girl, left her home in Manchester, New Hampshire on the evening of January 13, 1964, during a heavy snowstorm, apparently in response to a man's telephone call for a babysitter. Eight days later, after a thaw, her body was found by the side of a major north-south highway several miles away. She had been murdered. The event created great alarm in the area, and the police immediately began a massive investigation.

On January 28, having learned from a neighbor that the petitioner, Edward Coolidge, had been away from home on the evening of the girl's disappearance, the police went to his house to question him. They asked him, among other things, if he owned any guns, and he produced three, two shotguns and a rifle. They also asked whether he would take a lie detector test concern-

RE: No. 323 - Coolidge v. New Hampshire

It now seems clear that John Harlan will cast the dispositive vote in this case. The new material at pages 29-38 of the text of this circulation has been added in an effort to persuade him. If he ultimately remains unpersuaded, and I end up by converting this to a dissenting opinion, it is my thought that this new textual material would be dropped.

I would affirm the judgment. In my view, Coolidge's Pontiac was lawfully seized as evidence of the crime in plain sight and thereafter was lawfully searched under Cooper v. California, 386 U. The Fourth Amendment commands that the public shall be secure in their "persons, houses, papers and effects" against unreasonable searches and seizures. The right "to search the person of the accused when legally arrested to discover and seize the fruits or evidences of crime . . . has been uniformly maintained in many cases." *Weeks v. MEMORANDUM TO THE CONFERENCE

With the publication of Coolidge and Bivens, four Justices (CJ, JMH, HLB and HAB) will have stated for the record their dissatisfaction with Mapp v. Ohio insofar as the exclusionary rule is based on the Fourth Amendment. In addition, although I do not presume to indicate Potter's present views, I note that he did not join the Court in Mapp. For myself, our struggles of this term suggest at least a reexamination of the premise that gave rise to them. My present view is that the exclusionary rule should at least be narrowed.

Thus I suggest we consider whether we should call for reargument in Coolidge limited to the single question whether Mapp v. Ohio should be overruled.

Edward H. Coolidge, Jr.,

MR. JUSTICE BLACKMUN, dissenting.

I join Part III of the Court's opinion and its ruling upholding against constitutional challenge the acquisition by the police of the rifle and articles of clothing from the Coolidge home on February 2, 1964.

I see no need for the detailed analysis contained in Parts I and II of the Court's opinion. Even if one assumes that the search warrant was invalidly issued and that the facts of the case do not take it within any of the exceptions to the warrant requirement—conclusions I need not reach—then, in view of Part III, the result is that what should have been excluded are only the vacuum sweepings from the Pontiac. These sweepings, say the Court, were used "as part of an attempt . . . to show . . . that it was probable" the victim had been in Coolidge's car.

This is all that the Court's search and seizure analysis yields. It adds up, for me, in the light of the entire record, and despite the circumstantial evidence character of the case, to nothing more than harmless error. The Court's own description of the sweepings is indicative of their insignificant evidentiary weight.

I would affirm the conviction. Chapman v. California, 386 U. S. 18, 21-25 (1967); Harrington v. California, 395 U. S. 250 (1969); Dutton v. Evans, 400 U. S. 74, 90-93 (1970) (BLACKMUN, J., concurring).

P.S. Hugo:

The seizure of Coolidge's automobile reminded me of a case I had on the Court of Appeals. I looked this up and found the facts amazingly similar. There the arrest had taken place inside a restaurant. The automobile was on the parking lot outside. We observed that if the car had been searched forthwith, the search would have been incident to a lawful arrest, and would have been a reasonable search. The case is Drummond v. United States, 350 F.2d 983, 987 (CA 8, 1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 944.

Re: No. 323 - Coolidge v. New Hampshire

Dear Hugo:

I have read and re-read the several opinions proposed for this case. They total 83 pages.

Because I am not now prepared to commit myself to the exclusionary rule, even by the Fifth Amendment, I must withdraw my earlier-indicated complete assent to your opinion. Will you, instead, please add a note at the end of your opinion essentially to the following effect:

"Mr. Justice Blackmun joins Mr. Justice Black in Parts II and III of his opinion and in that portion of Part I thereof which is to the effect that the Fourth Amendment supports no exclusionary rule."

I could still be tempted to comment on the harmless error aspect of the evidence retrieved from the Pontiac. Upon a review of the entire record, it appears that this evidence consisted only of eight particles, vacuumed from the car and matched with particles from the victim's clothing, as contrasted with more than double that number of particles retrieved from Coolidge's clothing and matched with particles from Pamela's clothing. It is a small point, however; the other evidence speaks vividly for itself so I shall refrain from comment.

Sincerely,

H. A. B.
