No. 72-5521 - Strunk v. United States

MEMORANDUM TO THE CONFERENCE:

At Conference we were all agreed on reversal but a substantial number thought that even absent a cross petition by the Government we could perhaps remand on what to many of us seemed a clearly erroneous holding by the Court of Appeals in the speedy trial issue. My review of the record in light of prior holdings, including Barker v. Wingo, satisfied me that there is, on this record at least, only one remedy for denial of a speedy trial. Ordinarily I would, when unable to carry out the Conference vote, ask to have the case reassigned but there appears to be enough votes to support the result I think correct. I therefore propose disposition which follows:

Petitioner was found guilty in the United States District Court of transporting a stolen automobile from Wisconsin to Illinois in violation of 18 U.S.C. 2312 and sentenced to a term of 5 years. The 5-year sentence was to run concurrently with a sentence of 1 to 3 years that petitioner was then serving in the Nebraska State Penitentiary pursuant to a conviction in the courts of that state.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 72-5521

Clarence Eugene Strunk,	}	On Writ of Certiorari to the
Petitioner,		United States Court of
v.		Appeals for the Seventh
United States.		Circuit.

(1 June — 1973)

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER delivered the opinion of the Court.

Petitioner was found guilty in the United States District Court of transporting a stolen automobile from Wisconsin to Illinois in violation of 18 U. S. C. § 2312 and was sentenced to a term of five years. The five-year sentence was to run concurrently with a sentence of one to three years that petitioner was then serving in the Nebraska State Penitentiary pursuant to a conviction in the courts of that State.

The District Court denied a motion to dismiss the federal charge in which petitioner argued that he had been denied his right to a speedy trial. When the case went to trial, petitioner called no witnesses and did not take the stand; the jury returned a verdict of guilty. The Court of Appeals reversed the District Court and held that, on the record, petitioner had in fact been denied a speedy trial. However, the court went on to hold that the "extreme" remedy of dismissal of the charges was not warranted; the case was remanded to the District Court to reduce the sentence to the extent of the 259 days in order to compensate for the unnecessary delay which had occurred between return of the indictment and petitioners' arraignment.

Dear Bill:

I will be at the Law School, University of Alabama on Monday morning and will not return to Washington until after lunch.

Will you undertake to "announce" my opinion in No. 72-5521 - Strunk v. United States?

You may do this in any way you wish. My format is very simple:

FOR REASONS STATED IN AN OPINION FILED
WITH THE CLERK TODAY THE JUDGMENT UNDER REVIEW IS REVERSED AND REMANDED.

Thank you for taking over while I have a morning "bull session" with law students on the general problems of District Courts and Courts of Appeals -- things they hear very little about in Law School.

Regards,

CLARENCE EUGENE STRUNK v. UNITED STATES

Recirculated: _____

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

No. 72-5521. Decided January —, 1973

MR. JUSTICE WHITE, dissenting.

On appeal from his conviction for transporting a motor vehicle in interstate commerce knowing it to have been stolen, 18 U. S. C. § 2312, petitioner claimed that he had been deprived of his Sixth Amendment right to a speedy trial. He had previously raised the issue in a pre-trial motion to dismiss the indictment pursuant to Rule 48, Fed. Rule Crim. Proc. 48 (b). The Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit evaluated the speedy trial claim on the basis of the standards articulated by this Court in Barker v. Wingo, 407 U. S. 514 (1972). Finding an unreasonable delay between the issuance of the indictment and the date of trial, an absence of sufficient justification for the delay, and prejudice to petitioner from the delay, the Court of Appeals held that petitioner "was denied a speedy trial to his prejudice." The Court of Appeals, however, refused to dismiss the indictment against petitioner, but rather remanded the case to the District Court "with direction to enter an order instructing the Attorney General to credit the defendant with the period of time elapsing between the return of the indictment and the date of the arraignment." The Court of Appeals reasoned that, since petitioner's counsel had admitted that the delay had not prejudiced the presentation of his defense and since the only prejudice to petitioner was the delay in commencement of his federal sentence, the proper remedy for the constitutional violation was to treat the sentence as illegal to the extent of the delay. See Fed. Rule Crim. Proc. 35.

Re: No. 72-5521 - Strunk v. United States

Dear Chief:

I have slightly altered my views on this case since the Conference discussion. As I recall, all of us agreed that the remedy applied by the Court of Appeals after it found the violation of the petitioner's right to speedy trial was an improper one; the majority of us agreed that the government could support the judgment of the Court of Appeals here on the ground that the Court of Appeals had erroneously determined that there was in fact a violation of the petitioner's speedy trial right, although that majority was divided into whether or not it would accept the government's invitation to review the Court of Appeals' determination on that issue. We then got into a discussion of whether if the government's contention were in fact sustained on this issue, the government was entitled to anything more than an affirmance of the Court of Appeals' judgment, in view of the fact that the government did not petition for certiorari.

Further thinking along this line now convinces me that the government is not entitled to even raise in this Court the merits of the speedy trial contention, in view of the fact that it failed to cross-petition for certiorari. I reached this conclusion because acceptance of the government's contention on this point would not lead to an affirmance of the judgment below, but instead to an affirmance of the

REPRODUCED FROM THE COLLECTION

OF THE MANUSCRIPT DIVISION

District Court's judgment. Therefore the argument that the government makes is not really one in support of the judgment below, and could properly have been made only in the event of a cross-petition for certiorari.

Sincerely,
